Appendix I. Reader reception: the topic-selected corpora, every token in its context

Appendices F to H document the targeted retrieval, in which a character name was paired with a predefined moral cue. The two corpora below are different in kind: threads and reviews were selected because they discuss Scarlett or Ashley, whether or not they use any term under investigation, and were then taken in full. Every token of the four moral-evaluative domains predicated of either character is listed. Formulaic uses, tokens predicated of other characters and metadiscussion are excluded; readers' spelling and punctuation are kept. These are the full versions of Tables 7 and 8.

Appendix K. Frame-to-lexeme correspondences and their principal translational or pragmatic effects

The table in Appendix C now reports the same correspondences with token counts. The qualitative version is retained here because its last column states the pragmatic consequence of each correspondence, which the counts do not carry.

Table K1. Frame-to-lexeme correspondences and their principal translational or pragmatic effects

| Contextually identified frame | English | Russian | Kazakh | Principal translational or pragmatic effect |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Social or bodily exposure | shame, ashamed | styd, stydno, smuščenie | ūialu, ūiat, qysylu, qymsynu | Ambiguity may remain; Kazakh may also specify constraint, awkwardness, or inhibition. |
| Moral self-judgment | shame, ashamed | styd, stydno; occasionally sovest' | ūiat, ūialu, ar-ūiat, ar-ūjdan | Russian may draw shame toward conscience; Kazakh may connect it to a broader moral-social faculty. |
| Public verdict | Shame | pozor | ūiat, masqara | The experience is construed as public exposure, scandal, or damaged standing. |

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Felt guilt | guilt, guilty | čuvstvo viny; frequently sovest′ or ugryzenija sovesti | kinä, künä, kinä men künä, ūiat, qysylu, ar-ūjdan, ökınış | Kazakh differentiates by what is foregrounded: fault, sin, constraint, inner judgment, or regret; Russian makes the inner judge more salient. |
| Conscience as authority or opponent | conscience | predominantly sovest′ | ar, ūiat, ūjdan, ar-ūiat, ar-ūjdan | Russian stabilizes a relatively unified faculty; Kazakh distributes its functions across overlapping moral concepts. |
| Honor as behavioral code | honor, honorable, dishonorable | čest′, porjadočnost′, besčestnyj | ar, namys, ar-ūiat, ar-ūjdan, ar-namys | Converges with forms used for Scarlett's conscience, reducing the English Ashley-Scarlett contrast. |
| Honor as social standing | honor | čest′; occasionally gordost′ | abyroi | The translations foreground reputation, prestige, or social standing. |
| Honor as tribute or glory | honor | počesti | abyroi, qūrmet | Honor is construed as recognition bestowed upon a person rather than as an internal code. |
| Honor as intrinsic nobility | honor, honorable | blagorodnyj, blagorodstvo | asyl, bekzat; for Melanie, janynyñ asyldyğy, päktigi | Character quality is distinguished from behavioral code and social standing. |
| Ironic honor | honor, honorable, gentleman | čtimyj, vysokočtimyj, mnogouvažaemyj; sometimes čest′ | qūrmettı, qadırlı, ardaqtau, abyroi, and elevated bekzat vocabulary | Ceremonious respect language becomes the echoic target of Rhett's irony. |

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Performed or ironic shame | shame, ashamed | stydno, stydit'sja, pozor | ūialu, ūiat, yñğaisyz | The shame proposition may be preserved while the speaker's stance reverses its expected sincerity. |
| Uninhibited affection | unashamedly, shamelessly | negated styd or besstydno | negated qysylu or qymsynu | English and Russian retain the shame root; Kazakh removes awkwardness or inhibition without denying moral awareness. |
| Moral shamelessness | shamelessness, unashamed | besstydstvo; negated stesnjat'sja | ūiatsyzdyq, ūiatsyz, arsyz | Kazakh distinguishes lack of moral restraint or capacity from benign freedom from social inhibition. |

Appendix L. Scarlett's conscience in other characters' speech

Seven of the 31 annotated conscience tokens attributed to Scarlett are uttered by Rhett, and all are ironic, dismissive, or negative. The remaining 24 are narratorial, two of them quoted thought in Scarlett's own words.

Table L1. Scarlett's conscience in other characters' speech

| Token | Wording | Frame |
|---|---|---|
| #141 | "Did your—er—conscience bother you much when you offered to…" | opponent, attacker, judge |
| #148 | "sprouting a conscience this late in life" | plant or creature, able to be born or to die |
| #150 | "the elasticity of your conscience" | stretchable object |
| #151 | "I leave you to what remains of your conscience" | resource almost spent |
| #157 | "I hope your conscience hurts you" | tormentor |
| #165 | "you aren't going to ease your own conscience" | weight-carrier |

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| #174 | “Forget your conscience, Scarlett” | general moral faculty |
